NO HOPE FOR ROOSEVELT

Indications From All Quarters Point to Increased Business in All Lines.

On September 25, 1910, Major James H. Dooley published a letter in The Times-Dispatch, in which he predicted that there would be a great fall 'n the value of Wall Street securities. This conclusion was reached by Major Dooley partly by reason of the recurrence of similar depressions

s by Major Dooley partly by reason of the recurrence of similar depressions in the past, but chiefly because of the extravagance as reflected in the high cost of living, and because the country had not given itself a proper period for rest and recuperation after the great panic of 1907.

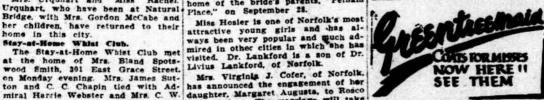

This letter from Major Dooley was not received with friendliness by the public, all of whom [naturally expected an immediate increase in business, with a rise in prices of lands, stocks and manufactures.

The fall predicted by Major Dooley actually did take place in 1911—stocks which sold at an average of 103 whom he wrote his letter declining to 92 in September, 1911. Since that time stocks have advanced some fourteen points.

dition and expanding every day.

"The leather business is good, the wool business is good, the shipping business is booming and will continue to increase, probably, until the Panama Canal is open for transportation.

"On the other hand, pessimists say: First," we are going to have tight money. Second, we are going to have labor troubles and higher cost of labor. Third, the high cost of living hangs like a pall over the whole comtry.

"Higher interest rares if they come, will be caused by a sound and legitimate expansion of business and by the necessity of transporting to market the biggest crops the country has ever produced. Higher rates for money ways accompany a great expansion of business, but it cannot be said that a legitimate and sound expansion of business and the necessity of transporting the greatest crope ever produced in this sountry, are a bear argument.

"With regard to labor it is no new ever produced in this country, are a bear argument.

"With regard to labor it is no new thing, that the labor unions in the time of prosperity should demand and obtain an increase of wages. Higner wages are not in themselves, a bear argument; they always accompany prosperity. Low wages can be produced only by a depression in business. Higher wages enable the laborer to purchase more goods, making more money for the merchant, the farmer and the manufacturer. Hence the effect of higher wages is increased business. The high cost of living is a condition we have always with us, and if that is to bring about a bear market, we can never have a bull one. High cost of living is an attendant upon prosperity; low cost of living comes only with poor business, low wages and tight money caused by lack of confidence. If we have tight money this fall, having the most magnifisent crops ever made to export we shall bring in gold from Europe to supply the demand.

"As to the political situation, which shall bring in gold from Europe to supply the demand.

Taft and Wilson O. K.

"As to the political situation, which is a common argument to frighten timid people, there is nothing in it so far as can be now sear, to indicate that we shall have other than a safe President. The country is not afraid of either Mr. Taft or Mr. Wilson. Mr. Wilson is a man of conservative and sound education, well versed in the principals of political economy, and it is not to be apprehended that he will endeavor to bring about any condition of affairs which will be prefudicial to the interests of the country. Mr. Taft has been thoroughly tried and the country has confidence in his honesty, eagacity and his good judgment. It is not possible that Mr. Rosevelt can be elected this year. The worst that can happen is that he should get enough electoral votes to prevent either Mr. Taft or Mr. Wilson from gutting a majority and, thereby, throwing the election into Congress. If such a thing as this should happen, we may confidently expect that Congress will elset a sound and conservative man as the head of the government.

"It appears to me from a view of the whole situation that we are sure of an expanding business curing the next twelve months, with a strong probability of continued expansion until the opening of the Panama Camal."

a history still extant, and of great value. He died in his hundredth year. It was from among the Cantacuzenes at Constantinople that the Turkish Sultans selected their Hospedars, or Christian Governors of the Wallachian and Moldavian provinces that now can-stitute the kingdom of Rumania; and one of them, although a Christian, Sherban by name, took part in the Turkish siege of Vienna in the seven teenth century. Some of Sherban's descendants emigrated to Russis, and held high positions there, more espe-cially as Governors of Bessrabia and other Southwestern districts. They were authorized to style themselves princes.

The other branches of the house remained in Rumania, and one of them. George Cantacusene, has repeadedly held the office of premier of that Kingdom, and is the leader of the Conservative party at Bucharest as well as the head of all the Cantacusene family. He and the rest of the Rumanian members of the house dispease with the princely title, owing to the fact that the Rumanian constitutian has abolished all nobiliary titles and even archibited their use.

Joshua Reynolds—pictures now on their way to America from his ancestral home at Elvaston Castle, in Derbyshire—it is largely because he is childless, the next heir being his equally childless brether Fitzroy, and that they have bein come to the conclusion that it would be politic to take advantage of the present high prices of pictures by Reynolds, so as to be in a position to meet the demands of the treasury for the enormous succession duties on the death of the present peer. These taxes are so enerous that in many instances territorial magnates on succeeding to their estates are obliged to either shut up their country seats or else to let them for a number of years, owing to their inability to meet the expense of keeping them up.

Although he is to-day a peer with a rent roll of near a quarter of a million of dellars, he had but very little prospect of his present wealth or title when a young boy. His father was so poor that he was obliged to send him to the ordinary grammar school, instead of to Eton or to Harrow, and he spent his fifteenth and sixteenth years as a three dellar a week clerk to a civil engineer. One morning he received two letters. The first contained the offer of an appointment in India, and the second the wholly unexpected news that by the demise of a very remote cousin without issue, his father had become the Earl of Hagrington, and possessed of the large estates that go with that title and that he himself had become invested with his father's minor title of Viscount Petersham. What this meant to the family will be realized when I mention that the present. earl was one of a family of no less than twelve children.

Lord Harrington in due course succeeded to his father's honors and has shown himself a very progressive and go-ahead member of the House of Lords despite his Tory politics. He is among the titled shopkeeper of the metropolis. For he has long kept a store in Parliament Street, where fruit and also dairy produce from his Elvaston Castle estate in Derbyshire, and from his Gawsworth Hall property in Cheshire, are sold at retail. He is the head of one of the younger branches of the historic house of Stanhope and is famous in the sporting world on both sides of the Atlantic as author and compiler of the first stud-book of poloponies.

Neither the Duc nor the Duchesse de Morny have any integdion of divorcing, nor are they estranged. But, as mentioned in one of my letters printed about a fortnight ago, they are wellnigh ruined, owing not so much to mere extravagance, as to the mania of the duke for embarking in all sorts of foolish financial and industrial enterprises, under the impression that he is a singularly astute busines map.

The legal proceedings brought by the duchess for the separation of property are not, as usual in such instances, a prelude to a suit for divorce, but are merely designed to protect the remnants of the great fortune which the duchess inherited from her father, old Gusman Blance, long dictator of Venezuela, from her husband's creditors, for the sake of her children.

The duke offered no opposition to the duchesse's application, showing that he was in thorough agreement with her, and they remain as heretofore, an exceptionally united couple, who are al-
